

It would not serve the public's interest to allow any more consolidation of broadcast ownership. Extensive control of radio station programming by nationwide media companies is too pervasive as it is and causes all stations to sound alike. Individual creativity and initiative will be even more stifled by additional consolidation of ownership. Local communities should have more input and control of programming.